EXT. THE TERRACE, THE CHATEAU, LACOSTE 2003 - EVENING

Music up: something nostalgic, perhaps the lush strings that start Louis Armstrong’s I Only Have Eyes for You.

A figure sits in the spot that overlooks the vineyard, Eleanor’s favourite spot. A nurse carries a tray and sets it down on the table. The wheelchair is wheeled around and we see -

ELEANOR, transformed. A series of strokes has taken a terrible toll. But she smiles as we -

2 EXT. HOUSE, THE CHATEAU, LACOSTE 2003 - MORNING

Early morning, an August day.

3 INT. DRAWING ROOM, THE CHATEAU, LACOSTE 2003 - MORNING

ROBERT, 10 years-old now, walks the rooms of Patrick’s silent childhood home, opening doors, re-familiarising himself - and us - with the place.

In the drawing room, yoga mats, guitars and drums. Confined to the corner, a shape beneath a dust sheet.

ROBERT pulls back a corner, revealing David’s beloved piano. He plays a high note, taps out a tune.

4 INT. HALLWAY, THE CHATEAU, LACOSTE 2003 - MORNING

He leaves and -

- descends the fine staircase to the ground floor, past the spot where Young Patrick waited for Eleanor in ‘Never Mind’.

6 INT. CORRIDOR/ELEANOR’S BEDROOM, THE CHATEAU, LACOSTE 2003 - MORNING

The old dining room has become ELEANOR’s bedroom. Robert stands outside a door and watches. From his P.O.V. -
ELEANOR sits up in bed in the darkened room. A series of terrible strokes have taken their toll, and she looks frail and bewildered and trapped, her face lop-sided, her eyes cloudy.

A NURSE sits at her side - CLAUDINE, her carer - and puts a cup to her lip. ROBERT wonders - should I enter? A whisper -

MARY (O.S.)
Robert, darling -
(he turns)
Let’s say hello later. We need to go to the airport. Granny is waiting.

ROBERT clearly doesn’t relish this.

INT. PATRICK AND MARY’S BEDROOM, THE CHATEAU, LACOSTE 2003 -7 MORNING

PATRICK MELROSE, now very much in middle-age, lies contorted, sleeping fitfully. On his bedside table, bottles of pills. Suitcases, yet to be unpacked.

A SMALL CHILD tumbles down on his face, causing him to yelp in pain and surprise.

PATRICK
Fuck-ing hell!

MARY
Patrick!

PATRICK
Sorry! Sorry, sorry, sorry Thomas!

THOMAS, ROBERT’s younger brother, bounces on the bed.

PATRICK (CONT’D)
I was just finally dropping off. I’ve been awake all night.

MARY
And now it’s time to get up!

PATRICK
I thought we were on holiday.

MARY
Yes, I thought so too, but we’ve been up since five, haven’t we Thomas?

(a kiss goodbye)
We’re off to fetch my mother from the airport.
PATRICK
Well don’t rush back.

MARY
There’s lots to do. Open all the windows, air the place.
(heading out)
If you could finish unpacking, that would be very helpful -

He closes his eyes. A beat, then -

The strum of a guitar, the patter of drums. A jam session. PATRICK crosses to the window.

That wonderful Provençal view, but now on the lawn three figures sit, legs crossed, one of them tapping on the drums.

PATRICK scowls, swears. On the warpath, he crosses to the wardrobe, opens the door -

Leaflets, paraphernalia, cardboard boxes full of books.

MARY is just getting into the car when PATRICK strides past in t-shirt and pyjama bottoms, his feet rammed into unlaced brogues. In his arms, a bulging box of books and leaflets, all balanced on a cheap notice-board. Forced brightness -

PATRICK
Have a nice trip! Goodbye!

MARY
At least wait until we’ve unpacked -

PATRICK
I’m just going to say hello! Drive safely!

And on he strides to -

SEAMUS, late forties, beaming and bright, sits with his acolytes, KEVIN and ANNETTE.

SEAMUS
Ah, Patrick! I thought I heard your car last night. Welcome back! Eleanor can’t wait to see you. This is Kevin, Annette -

ANNETTE/KEVIN
Hey, Patrick!/Hallooo!
SEAMUS
Patrick, we were just discussing how wonderful your mother is, letting The Foundation use your beautiful home. Amazing woman. She’s helped so many people to connect.

PATRICK
With what?

SEAMUS
With other realities.

PATRICK
Yes, well, back in this one – (the box of books) – when I opened my wardrobe this morning, there were so many copies of The Way of the Spirit that they were getting in the way of the shoes.

SEAMUS
The Way of the Shoes. That’s actually the better title, reminding us to keep our feet on the ground.

PATRICK
Do you think these signs of institutional life could be removed when we’re here on holiday? In August this is our family home.

SEAMUS
Of course. I apologise.

PATRICK
These leaflets for reiki workshops and healing circles, they’re wasted on us. In fact this board, despite it’s attractive cork surface, is yours not ours.

SEAMUS
I’ll take it to my cottage –

PATRICK
My mother’s cottage –

SEAMUS
– where she lets me stay –

PATRICK
For how long? I thought you were going back to Ireland.
SEAMUS
No, I'm staying for the summer. You won't know I'm here!

PATRICK manages to stop himself. He turns and leaves, snatching some rogue wind-chimes from the tree as he passes.

And SEAMUS watches him go, his good-humour unshakable.

INT. KITCHEN, THE CHATEAU, LACOSTE 2003 - MORNING

Back inside the house, PATRICK takes a moment to calm down.
The day is getting hotter already, and he takes a glass of water, fills it, drinks it, goes to put it down -

A SCORPION, tiny and delicate, skitters over the draining board. He contemplates killing it, hesitates, takes a glass, places it over the tiny creature. CLAUDINE, Eleanor's nurse, enters.

CLAUDINE
Monsieur Melrose?

PATRICK
Bonjour Claudine! Comment est ma mère?

CLAUDINE
Si vous voulez monter, votre mère vous attend.

INT. ELEANOR'S ROOM, THE CHATEAU, LACOSTE 2003 - MORNING

PATRICK enters the dim, stuffy room and crosses to ELEANOR, who sits in her bed. Even in the light, it's clear that she has transformed - thinning hair, snaggled teeth, a terrible fearfulness locked into her eyes. Illness has blown her apart like a dandelion clock, but she organises her face into a smile and PATRICK does his best to put her at ease.

ELEANOR
I want you to know...that I'm very unhappy... at not being able to...communicate.

PATRICK
(taking a seat)
It must be horrible.

ELEANOR
Yes. Horrible. Yes. But I am brave.

An awkward silence. ELEANOR eyes an envelope on her bedside table -
PATRICK
The others are at the airport, picking up Mary’s mother.
(PATRICK picks it up, opens.)
They’re all very keen to see you. Only when you’re feeling up to it. Thomas has grown, as you’d expect—(the contents)
What’s this?

PATRICK opens and reads, while ELEANOR strains for words.

ELEANOR
Need you.

PATRICK
I’m sorry, I’m just trying to—
(a deep breath)
This appears... If I understand correctly, you want to, you intend to give this house away.

ELEANOR
Yes—

PATRICK
To the Foundation, the Transpersonal Foundation, with immediate effect.

ELEANOR
Yes. Soon. Please, understand?

EXT. DRIVEWAY, THE CHATEAU, LACOSTE 2003 – DAY

The car returns. PATRICK comes out to meet them and, dazed and furious, starts to unpack. Here’s KETTLE, MARY’s mother—sunglasses, flowing dress.

PATRICK
Good flight?

KETTLE
Hello, Patrick. No, hideous. There was an awful woman next me who was terrifically proud of her breasts and kept sticking them in her child’s face.

MARY
It’s called breast-feeding.
TETTLE
Thank you, darling. I know it’s all the rage but when I was having children, the clever woman was the one who went to the party looking as if she’d never been pregnant, not the one with her breasts hanging out. At least not for breast-feeding...oh!

PATRICK is already walking away with KETTLE’s bag.

MARY
(hurrying after)
Robert, can you show Granny to her room.

KETTLE
It’s not too near the children, is it?

INT. HALLWAY, THE CHATEAU, LACOSTE 2003 - DAY
KETTLE’s discarded suitcase stands on the landing.

MARY
Patrick? Where are you?

INT. DRAWING ROOM, THE CHATEAU, LACOSTE 2003 - DAY
She enters. PATRICK is pouring a glass of wine from a bottle, largely empty. She is shocked, but tries not to betray this.

MARY
(- the wine)
Goodness. What’s happened here?

PATRICK
A temporary measure.

MARY
It’s been a while.

PATRICK
(moving on, the letter)
She’s excelled herself this time. From the solicitors, care of my mother, if ‘care’ is the right word. I’ve been disinherited.

MARY What?
PATRICK
She's signing the house over to this joke charity. Nothing to us, nothing to the children.

MARY
Oh, Patrick -

PATRICK
Oh, and she wants to know if I'll check for loopholes. It's not enough to be disinherited, I have to chip in with the paperwork.

MARY
That's awful. Did she say why?

PATRICK
It took half the morning, but apparently she wants to 'do good'. She wants to help people, anyone really, just as long as they're not fucking related to her!

MARY
Not so loud!

PATRICK
Oh, and she 'seeks closure' and wants my 'validation.' That bastard Seamus might as well have been whispering in her fucking ear!

MARY
Darling, you're ranting -

PATRICK
I have to rant! She was always a lousy mother, but I hoped she might take a holiday towards the end of her life, feel that she'd achieved enough by way of betrayal and neglect and that it was time to have a break, play with her grandchildren.

ROBERT has left the others, and now stands outside the door, listening in. INTERCUT -

PATRICK (O.S.)
What frightens me is how much I loathe her.

(MORE)
Reading that letter, I tried to loosen my collar so I could breathe, and then I realised it wasn’t my collar, it was actually a noose tightening around my neck, a noose of loathing...

INT. DRAWING ROOM, THE CHATEAU, LACOSTE 2003 - CONTINUOUS

MARY
She’s a frightened old woman!

PATRICK
I know!

(quieter)
I know. What do I loathe then? I loathe the poison dripping down from generation to generation. I’d rather die than inflict the same thing on our children.

INT. HALLWAY, THE CHATEAU, LACOSTE 2003 - CONTINUOUS

MARY (O.S.)
That won’t happen. Not if we don’t let it.

On ROBERT, confused and troubled.

INT. BEDROOM, THE CHATEAU, LACOSTE 2003 - NIGHT

Insomnia, as the cicadas compete with the click-click-click of an oscillating electric fan. There are three in the bed tonight – THOMAS sleeps soundly with MARY, while PATRICK lies wide-awake.

INT. KITCHEN, THE CHATEAU, LACOSTE 2003 - DAWN

In the kitchen, the scorpion is still under the upturned glass.

Giving up on sleep, hung-over, PATRICK is making black coffee. He sees the glass, lifts it, lets the scorpion scamper away.
Breakfast. KETTLE, in sun-hat, speaks in a low voice to MARY, while PATRICK drinks coffee and consults papers.

KETTLE
She’s giving it all away?

MARY
To the charity, yes.

KETTLE
Strange kind of charity.

A car is pulling up in the driveway. A new arrival. PATRICK springs to his feet, as ROBERT is approaching.

MARY
Robert, go and say hello.
(under her breath) I’m only telling you in case Patrick seems a little off.

KETTLE
So he should be. It’s so lovely here. Nothing at all to the grandchildren? Goodness, what on earth did he do to her?

MARY
Nothing!

Getting out of the car -

JULIA
Hello there!

She’s joined by her daughter, LUCY, shy, the same age as ROBERT, who loiters shyly.

MARY
Let’s not talk about it, certainly not in front of the children.

KETTLE
Who’s this now?

MARY
I told you. It’s Patrick’s friend, Julia. Lucy’s her daughter.

PATRICK kisses and hugs JULIA, as LUCY loiters.

KETTLE
He certainly seems pleased to see her.
JULIA
(shouting over) Mary! Hello there!

MARY forces a smile.

MARY
He’s just being nice to her. She’s been having a hard time.

EXT. GARDEN, THE CHATEAU, LACOSTE 2003 - AFTERNOON

PATRICK and JULIA are lounging in the shade, drinking wine.

PATRICK
Most people wait for their parents to die with a mixture of sadness and plans for a new swimming pool. Seeing as I’m going to have to renounce the swimming pool, I thought I might ditch the sadness too.

JULIA
But can’t you fight it? You’re a barrister for Christ’s sake.

PATRICK
She may be an un-maternal idiot, but it’s still her money. If she wants to blow the last of it on a New Age hotel, there’s nothing I can do to stop her.

JULIA
Can’t you pretend to be a shaman and keep the place?

PATRICK
Sadly I’m one of the few people on the planet with absolutely no healing powers.

Nearby ROBERT and LUCY sit reading in silence, some distance apart.

JULIA
Why aren’t you playing with each other? Play! Play!

PATRICK
Besides, I have quite enough trouble looking after my family without saving the world.
JULIA
I think looking after your children can be a way of giving up.
(PATRICK takes this in)
They become the whole ones, the well ones, the ones who don’t drink too much, get divorced, become mentally ill. You spend so much time guarding them from decay and depression that you end up decayed and depressed.
(She takes PATRICK’s hand. ROBERT sees this)
I’m sorry, I’m a little down. Since the divorce I get these terrible moments of vertigo, like I don’t exist.

ROBERT
(listening in)
I get that!

JULIA
At your age? I think that’s very pretentious.

ROBERT
It’s true!

PATRICK
But it doesn’t stop you being a happy child, does it?

ROBERT
Sometimes, when it’s going on.

Stung by JULIA’s teasing, ROBERT stalks back to his mother.

JULIA
(laughs, squeezes PATRICK’s hand)
You’re doing a wonderful job.

SEAMUS (O.C.)
Hello, there!

PATRICK
Oh Christ, it’s the landlord.

PATRICK picks up a book, turns his back to SEAMUS.

JULIA
Am I allowed to talk to him?

Back to MARY and ROBERT -
ROBERT
Why does she have to come on our holiday?

MARY
Well, Julia’s on her own now and daddy wants to cheer her up.

ROBERT
But why?

MARY
I think she makes him feel young. Look at him. Like a teenager.

ROBERT
I don’t think you like Julia very much.

MARY
Robert! I do like her. But whereas clever people are just thinking aloud, Julia is thinking about what she sounds like.

(she watches JULIA talking with SEAMUS)
I shouldn’t have said that. Don’t repeat it.

ROBERT
Fine. But don’t make me play with Lucy.

MARY
We won’t make you, we just thought it would be nice for you to spend time with someone your own age.

ROBERT
You wouldn’t go to tea with someone just because she was 39.

MARY
Absolutely right. I hope your father’s not about to start another fight -

JULIA and SEAMUS are speaking, JULIA dry and sarcastic on PATRICK’s behalf, while he closes his eyes, bites his tongue.

SEAMUS
I’m writing a book, you see, about the healing work we do here.

JULIA
Are you a healer yourself?
PATRICK

(he can’t help himself)
Yes, Seamus, who have you healed?

SEAMUS
Well, I worked in a nursing home for many years, washing patients who were covered in their own faeces, spoon-feeding old people who couldn’t feed themselves, that kind of thing. I’m grateful for it. It kept me grounded.

PATRICK
Well it’s a shame you didn’t stick with that, you might have actually done some tangible good.

SEAMUS
Patrick likes to keep me grounded too. But I think we do tangible good, with the courses we run.

JULIA
But why is it a charity? If people pay -

SEAMUS
We bring inner-city kids here. They love it, the meditation, the trance music, the drumming. They say to me ‘Seamus, this is incredible, it’s like tripping without drugs.’

PATRICK
Do we need a charity for tripping? Of all the ills in the world, it seems a wild hole to plug. Why not just give them acid?

SEAMUS
You can tell he’s a barrister!

PATRICK
I’m all for people having hobbies, but can’t they do it in the comfort of their homes?

SEAMUS
Sadly, some homes are not that comfortable.

PATRICK
No. I know the feeling.

SEAMUS
Well. Good to meet you, Julia -
PATRICK
And Seamus -

SEAMUS
Patrick.

PATRICK
This 'gift' of Eleanor's. About the house.

SEAMUS
Yes, she mentioned that.

PATRICK
I'm looking into it. Don't go picking out the wallpaper just yet.

SEAMUS smiles, leaves, entirely in control.

INT. BEDROOM, THE CHATEAU, LACOSTE 2003 - NIGHT

3 a.m. Another night without sleep. As MARY and THOMAS slumber, PATRICK sits in an armchair, tries to read by the bedside light. Impossible. He gets up -

INT. OFFICE, THE CHATEAU, LACOSTE 2003 - NIGHT

- then unpacks the contents of the legal file. David's old bedroom has been turned into the Foundations's office, and PATRICK sits with a glass of whisky, and goes through the documents, the bank statements, the tax files -

INT/EXT. OFFICE, THE CHATEAU, LACOSTE 2003 - DAWN

- and is still there the next morning, smoking by the window.

OMITTED

INT. ELEANOR'S BEDROOM, THE CHATEAU, LACOSTE 2003 - CONTINUOUS

ELEANOR struggles to eat lunch with CLAUDINE nearby. She has insisted on using the fork, but is finding it difficult.

ELEANOR
Can't...find my mouth.

MARY steps in, helping her. PATRICK finds himself struggling between pity and rage. ROBERT observes this. ELEANOR shakes her head - no more - and CLAUDINE leaves.

PATRICK
I hesitate to mention this -
MARY
Please, keep on hesitating -

PATRICK
(in his calmest voice)
- but this idea of yours, to sign over to the Foundation.
I’ve looked through the papers and I want to point out it leaves you very exposed -

PATRICK
Of course you’re free to do as you wish, but your store of capital won’t pay for much more care. We could go broke very quickly...

MARY (CONT’D)
Patrick is only trying to help. You can do what you like, but if you give away too much, too soon -

PATRICK
If you could just loan the house for the time being and decide -

ELEANOR (CONT’D)
I REALLY DO OBJECT!

MARY does what PATRICK can’t do and puts her arms around ELEANOR, calming and soothing her.

PATRICK
We’ll leave. You must be tired. I’m sorry if I upset you.

She holds her hand out to ROBERT. Confused, he goes over, leans in to kiss her. She holds him, whispers in his ear.

ELEANOR
Don’t...leave me.

ROBERT
Now?

Her hand is tight on his arm.

ELEANOR
Don’t...no...

But ROBERT steps back, turns away and leaves with his father.
ROBERT watches his father as he opens a bottle of wine, frightened and confused. MARY enters.

PATRICK
What can drive a man mad is being forced to have the emotion he’s being forbidden to have at the same time. The treachery makes me feel furious, and now I’m forced to feel pity. Well I’m a simple sort of man and I remain fucking angry!

MARY
Robert, everyone’s by the pool, go and join them.

(once he has gone)
I don’t think it’s kind to turn Robert against his grandmother.

PATRICK
In a beauty contest between her only child and a complete stranger, my mother chose the stranger —

MARY
— and you’re right to feel betrayed, but Robert —

PATRICK
No, she lied to all of us. At every stage she told me, this is destined for Robert, this is for Thomas, for our children, but all those little concessions to family feeling are being tossed away, replaced by the trademark family malice and spite.

MARY
That’s not inevitable —

PATRICK
Isn’t it?

MARY
Not necessarily. Please — spend time with the children. That’s why we’re here.

EXT. SWIMMING POOL, THE CHATEAU, LACOSTE 2003 — AFTERNOON

And now PATRICK, bottle in hand, has thrown all that energy into being an aggressively good dad. MARY follows him down to the pool, where JULIA, KETTLE, ROBERT and LUCY are reading quite contentedly.
PATRICK
Right. Who wants to play in the pool? Robert?

ROBERT
I’m reading!

PATRICK
Nonsense. Let’s play, that’s why we’re here. Lucy? Julia? No?

JULIA shakes her head and returns to her book.

EXT. SWIMMING POOL, THE CHATEAU, LACOSTE 2003 - AFTERNOON

And now they’re in the pool for a kind of water-rugby, with PATRICK a little too enthusiastic.

So that when ROBERT has the ball, PATRICK grabs it too, and tries to keep hold of it. There’s a tussle, light-hearted enough, but when ROBERT wins and snatches the ball, there’s a suspended moment -

- before PATRICK lunges at him a little too hard and ROBERT goes underwater. The play-fighting continues a moment too long, with ROBERT underwater. He burst to the top, panicked, reaching for the side.

MARY
ROBERT!

PATRICK
He’s alright, we’re just playing -

MARY
It’s too much -

KETTLE
I knew this would happen, I could feel it -

PATRICK
For Christ’s sake, Kettle -

JULIA
I’m sure he’s fine -

MARY pulls him out of the pool.

PATRICK
There’s nothing to see. You’re okay, aren’t you? Robert?

MARY is there. He’s tearful, shaken, but loyal to his father -

ROBERT
I’m fine. Really. It’s just a game.
But PATRICK stands alone in the centre of the pool.

PATRICK

There, you see?

Only JULIA gives him a sympathetic look.

30 INT. KITCHEN, THE CHATEAU, LACOSTE 2003 - EVENING

A little later - dressed for the evening. PATRICK has snuck inside. Somewhat furtively, he is shaking pills into the palm of his hand. Behind him, JULIA is bringing in plates from supper.

JULIA

That looks like fun.

PATRICK

Not fun, a necessity I’m afraid - (he shows her the label)

Want one?

JULIA

I’ve got my own -

PATRICK

Of course you have -

JULIA

- but if you’re offering. How long?

PATRICK

Four years.

JULIA

I thought you were only meant to take it for thirty days.

He shakes a pill into her hand.

PATRICK

Oh, I definitely have a problem, namely it’s not strong enough. I get all the side effects, memory loss, dehydration, nightmarish withdrawals, everything except sleep.

(pills between finger and thumb)

Strange to think that we used to do this for fun. Remember taking acid in Greece?

JULIA

I remember where you stashed it.
PATRICK
Yes, sorry about that.

JULIA
Obviously I didn’t mind. But. Let’s not get nostalgic.

PATRICK
Another pleasure denied.

He pours wine, to wash them down.

JULIA
Whenever I get nostalgic I force myself to remember what youth was actually like.

PATRICK
It was awful. The trouble is, all I really remember is sex. A great abundance of sex and a sense of potential, instead of the absence of sex and a sense of waste. Christ, I’m going to need 40mg tonight.

JULIA
Perhaps – perhaps we shouldn’t have this conversation.

PATRICK
Perhaps not.

He lifts the glass, and they swallow their pills together.

31
INT. THOMAS’S BEDROOM, THE CHATEAU, LACOSTE 2003 – NIGHT 31
But even 40mg is not enough. In his old childhood bedroom, PATRICK’s feet stick out the bottom of the tiny bed. No hope of sleep, memories crowding in. A whisper –

ELEANOR (V.O.)
Hello, my darling boy. I’m so sorry to wake you –

31A
INT. DRAWING ROOM, THE CHATEAU, LACOSTE 2003 – DAWN 31A
A brief glimpse of a portrait; the Melrose family now –

INT. YOUNG PATRICK’S BEDROOM, THE CHATEAU, LACOSTE 1968 – 32 DAWN
– as we flashback to ELEANOR, in this same room, speaking soft and low –
YOUNG PATRICK
What time is it?

ELEANOR
It’s very early.

YOUNG PATRICK
Are we going now?
(she nods)
Shall I pack my bag?

ELEANOR
Oh, my darling -
(taking his hand)
I’ve got to go without you.

YOUNG PATRICK
You can’t -

ELEANOR
Please understand. You need to stay here with your father, just for a short while. Then when I’ve spoken to the lawyers -

ELEANOR
Patrick! Listen to me, this is important. If we’re to be together I must do this exactly right. I have to speak to the lawyers first. It won’t be long, but I must be careful, do this properly, then I can come back for you. Do you understand? Patrick - do you understand?

INT. THOMAS’S BEDROOM, THE CHATEAU, LACOSTE 2003 - NIGHT

Back in the present day, PATRICK abandons any hope of sleep in this room. He sits -

INT. CORRIDOR, THE CHATEAU, LACOSTE 2003 - NIGHT

- and walks along the corridor, heel to toe, until he reaches JULIA’s door. He pauses, reaches for the handle -

ROBERT
Daddy.

ROBERT rubs his eyes, pale and frowning.

PATRICK
Hello.
ROBERT
What are you doing?

PATRICK
Good question. Thomas has pushed me out of bed again, so I thought I’d go and sleep in his room.

ROBERT
But that’s Julia’s room.

PATRICK
Yes, I wanted to check she was –
(on cue – THOMAS crying)
Poor Thomas, I’d better, you must – Goodnight.

And wincing, cursing himself, he walks away.

EXT. POOL, THE CHATEAU, LACOSTE 2003 - DAY

And now PATRICK stands in pyjamas and sunglasses, David Melrose-style, watching the automated pool-cleaner crawl round the floor of the pool. Ennui - failing as a father, failing as a husband, failing as a son.

EXT. BEDROOM, GATE TERRACE, THE CHATEAU, LACOSTE 2003 - DAY

Seated in her wheelchair, PATRICK pushes ELEANOR into the glaring light. She shields her eyes.

EXT. TERRACE, THE CHATEAU, LACOSTE 2003 - DAY

A long table has been laid out - JULIA, LUCY, ROBERT, MARY are there, CLAUDINE helping with THOMAS. PATRICK pushes ELEANOR to KETTLE, aloof in dark glasses and sun hat, conspicuously uninterested.

PATRICK
I must say, it’s like a dream, having both of you here together at the same time.

ELEANOR
Like a...dream.

KETTLE
(indifferent)
My dear, so nice to see you out.
How are you?

ELEANOR
Very...I am very...
PATRICK
(crossing to MARY)
Well, I’ll leave you two to chat.

The struggle continues, KETTLE’s interest visibly waning.

MARY
Thomas, don’t touch the wine, that’s for grown-ups.

PATRICK
It certainly is.

MARY
(the wine -)
Is that the answer?

PATRICK
We’ll find out.

MARY
I’m sure we will.

CLAUDINE leads THOMAS away to play elsewhere.

KETTLE
I was going to buy Thomas some child reins for his birthday but apparently they’re out of fashion.

MARY
I am not putting my child in a harness!

KETTLE
Really? Nanny used to swear by them.

MARY
And I used to swear at them.

KETTLE
You didn’t actually, because swearing was not allowed, unlike in some households.

PATRICK
(to MARY -)
Which one of our mothers is worst, d’you think? I realise the disinherance-thing gives Eleanor the edge, but yours is certainly putting in the work -

MARY
(more wine for PATRICK)
At least eat something first.
PATRICK
Anyone who thinks a week is a long time in politics should have her to stay. A week is a fucking eternity -

JULIA
I don’t know how you cope without a nanny.

MARY
I don’t know how I’d cope with one.
I’ve always wanted to look after the children myself.

JULIA
Yes, motherhood takes some people that way. It didn’t in my case, but I was quite young when I had Lucy.
(MARY bites her tongue.)
I think you can be too nice to children. If you want them to be television producers or chief executives it’s no use filling their heads with ideas of trust and truth-telling and reliability. They won’t be able to compete in the real world.

KETTLE
Hear hear!

SEAMUS (O.C.)
Hello there!

SEAMUS is approaching the house. PATRICK bridles, but keeps quiet.

SEAMUS (CONT’D)
I was going to call by and see
Eleanor, but here she is now.

But KETTLE would love an escape from ELEANOR’s company.
Making room -

KETTLE
Seamus, please sit here, join us for lunch.

SEAMUS
Oh, I wouldn’t want to intrude on a family affair.
(reaching for food)
Perhaps for a moment or two.

PATRICK exchanges an ironic look with JULIA, pours wine.

KETTLE
Patrick says you’re a writer.
PATRICK

Did I?.

KETTLE

I’ve sometimes wondered myself about writing a book. I have so many ideas, it’s just getting them down on paper.

SEAMUS is ignoring ELEANOR and chatting up KETTLE with the full force of his charm. ELEANOR, jilted, looks on, neglected.

SEAMUS

I swear, it can do your head in.
I’ve done the beginning, several beginnings. But then maybe it’s all beginnings, do you know what I mean?

KETTLE

Oh, I do.

PATRICK

She’s just doing it on purpose now, just to annoy us -

MARY

We won’t give her the satisfaction.

KETTLE

I must say, it all sounds absolutely fascinating.

SEAMUS

Join us! I’ll sign you up for a session.

KETTLE

D’you know, perhaps I will.
Patrick, I’m going to do a workshop!

PATRICK

You should. It’s the only way you’ll see the house in the cherry season.

SEAMUS

Ah, the cherries. Now they’re something. We always have a ritual around the cherries, don’t we Eleanor? You know, the fruits of life.
PATRICK
Sounds very profound. Do they taste better than if they were simply the fruits of the cherry tree?

ELEANOR
Cher...ries!

SEAMUS
Eleanor loves the cherries. I’ll bring you some.

PATRICK
A handsome rent. A simple bowl of cherries in exchange for all of this. Talk about the luck of the Irish -

ELEANOR
No. No, no, no, no -

MARY
Patrick! Enough.

ELEANOR
(Panicked. Springing into terrible life)

NOOOOO! No...rent!

Embarrassment. Shame. SEAMUS smiles, squeezes her hand and speaks quietly to her.

ROBERT, meanwhile, stands abruptly and walks away. MARY goes to follow.

PATRICK
No, I’ll go. It’s my fault.

ROBERT sits with his legs in the pool as PATRICK approaches and joins him.

PATRICK
I’m not giving you much of a holiday, am I? I’m sorry. Must try harder.

ROBERT
Is granny really giving this away?

PATRICK
That’s what she wants to do.

ROBERT
But...we love it here.
PATRICK
Yes, but this is hers, not ours.
She’s always been pathologically generous, and if she was giving it to the blind, or the homeless, or to medical research or the victims torture, we’d understand.

ROBERT
But she’s giving it to Seamus.

PATRICK
To the Foundation, so yes – to Seamus.

ROBERT
Do you loathe her?

PATRICK
Of course not, and you mustn’t either.

JULIA arrives -

JULIA
Well, this is a touching scene.
Mary wants you back, before Seamus seduces Kettle.

PATRICK
He’s trying to get Mary disinherited too. We’ll have to kill him after all.

ROBERT
If we kill Seamus, will we keep the house?

PATRICK
Sadly not.

JULIA
More efficient to kill Kettle, before she changes her will.

PATRICK
You’re right. I let emotion cloud my judgement.

But it’s all too much for ROBERT – too much malice, too flirtatious. He leaves and, with some remorse, PATRICK watches him go.

PATRICK (CONT’D)
Tell them we’re on our way!
(Watching ROBERT go -)
I should be more careful I suppose.
JULIA
(taking ROBERT’s place)
About what?

PATRICK
I’ve tried so hard not to pass on the malice and resentment, to give them a different sort of childhood, but they’re just fresh mistakes. And Robert notices everything –

(she sits next to him)
He caught me outside your room last night.

JULIA
What were you doing outside my room?

PATRICK
I thought I’d come and see you. Would you have been pleased?

A moment, then she leans across and kisses him.

JULIA
Maybe next time.

PATRICK
Is there going to be a next time?

JULIA
You’re bored and lonely, I’m bored and lonely –

PATRICK
That’s a terrifying amount of boredom and loneliness in one room.

JULIA
Maybe they’ll cancel each other out. Like electrical charges.

PATRICK
We should conduct an experiment.

JULIA
In controlled conditions.

PATRICK
See whether we eliminate boredom or achieve an overload of loneliness.

They kiss again.

JULIA
We should go back, or people will think we’re having an affair.
A chair, David’s favourite. PATRICK stands on it, a little woozy. Clamped between his teeth, like a pirate, is a screwdriver, and he now attempts to unscrew an oil painting from the wall.

MARY watches from the doorway.

MARY
I’m almost too scared to ask.

PATRICK
I’m cheering myself up. These are by Boudin. Sell these and we might just be able to afford a second bedroom in Queens Park, a normal, child-sized bedroom rather than a converted broom cupboard -

MARY
You can’t steal from her.

PATRICK
Not from her, from him. If he’s getting the house, I’m at least going to keep the fucking Boudins. Pass me that other screwdriver, will you?

MARY
You can’t keep this up. At some point, you’ll have to let it all go.

PATRICK
Bit late for that -

MARY
I don’t mean the house. (PATRICK doesn’t speak)

MARY (CONT’D)
Do you want to come up to bed with me?

PATRICK
Let’s not introduce exciting words like ‘want’. We both know Thomas will be claiming my place. I’ll sleep down here. Pass me the screwdriver, will you? (but MARY has already left him)

Screwdriver!
EXT. TERRACE, THE CHATEAU, LACOSTE 2003 - NIGHT

PATRICK smokes and drinks on the terrace. Above, there’s a light in Julia’s window.

INT. CORRIDOR/JULIA’S BEDROOM, THE CHATEAU, LACOSTE 2003 - NIGHT

PATRICK pushes at the door, which is open. JULIA lies awake.

PATRICK
Can I come in?

He enters, and JULIA sits, and they kiss. After a moment -

JULIA
Are you alright? You seem elsewhere.

PATRICK
No. No, I’m here.

And they begin to undress.

INT. JULIA’S BEDROOM, THE CHATEAU, LACOSTE 2003 - DAWN

They lie in bed as the sun rises. That air of detachment still lingers; they’re tender, but self-conscious too.

PATRICK
What time’s your flight?

JULIA
We have to leave here at nine.

PATRICK
Our timing -

JULIA
- has never been very good.

They kiss.

PATRICK
I should go. Before Thomas wakes up.

JULIA
Patrick. Summer fling. Yes?

A genuine question. Neither of them quite know what this is yet.

PATRICK
Summer fling.
Departures. JULIA and LUCY are giving KETTLE a lift to the airport. PATRICK is helping her with the bags.

JULIA
Well, thank you for having us.

PATRICK
We’ll speak on the phone.

JULIA
When you get a chance.

PATRICK
It won’t be the same.

JULIA
No. It won’t. ‘Bye.

- and we see this conversation from MARY’s P.O.V. - a pointedly chaste peck on the cheek between PATRICK and JULIA, but MARY isn’t fooled. KETTLE arrives.

KETTLE
Oh, dear. I wanted to say goodbye to Seamus. Send him my love, won’t you? It’ll be strange to be here without you, Patrick. Oh - is this your car? It’s very small...

MARY waves them all off. PATRICK walks away, pointedly not looking back.

PATRICK
Just us, thank God. Now we can have fun.

Smouldering cigar, black sunglasses and wine glass, PATRICK sits, detached, while the children play nearby. Documents, papers from the solicitors.

MARY edits a manuscript. A tense and fragile peace.

ROBERT
Ow! Something bit me!

MARY
Let me see.

ROBERT
Mosquito, right near my eye.
PATRICK
Don’t be too hard on mosquitos. Only the pregnant female whines, whereas women never stop...

The awful remark hangs in the air. Behind his dark glasses, PATRICK feels the hot flush of shame.

PATRICK (CONT’D)
I’m sorry, I don’t know why I said that. Here, let me help.

And he stumbles up to play with THOMAS, but the atmosphere has soured. Too drunk, too early in the day.

PATRICK (CONT’D)
Actually, I’m going to make some coffee.

He leaves. MARY watches, compassion fading. Growing hard.

INT. KITCHEN, THE CHATEAU, LACOSTE 2003 - DAY

In the kitchen, PATRICK spoons out coffee. His hand is shaking - a new development.

Spilt sugar - echoes of ‘Some Hope’, the nightmare of relapse and recovery.

47
INT. OFFICE, THE CHATEAU, LACOSTE 2003 - DAY

In the office, the fax chugs away. Legal documents to sign. He eyes the phone, picks it up, dials. The murmur of an answering machine.

PATRICK
Hello. Just checking that you got back safely -

And we switch P.O.V.’s to MARY in the hallway, watching, guessing.

PATRICK sees her too, hangs up with his finger, changes tone.

PATRICK (CONT’D)
I’ll try again tomorrow. Bye.
(turning to the papers)
Solicitors. Nearly there.

48
INT. BEDROOM, THE CHATEAU, LACOSTE 2003 - NIGHT

And now MARY and PATRICK both lie rigid, tense, as the electric fan clicks - click - click.

PATRICK gives in, gets up. MARY - wide awake.
PATRICK is back on the chair, screwing the stolen Boudins back into place. In dressing gown, MARY watches from the doorway.

PATRICK
It’s the right thing to do.

MARY
I’m sure it is.

PATRICK
Also, they’re fakes. I spoke to a man at Sothebys. You can tell from the waves apparently. Seamus isn’t the first person to bamboozle her, some art dealer in Paris pulled off that facile trick thirty years ago.

MARY
Well, let’s not tell Seamus.

PATRICK
Certainly not.

MARY
Imagine his face when he finds out.

PATRICK
‘Dere go da flotation tanks!’

And they laugh together – a great relief.

— and now they lie together on the sofa. Quiet, tender –

PATRICK
I think –

MARY Go on –

PATRICK
I need to let this all go. The family’s being split in half and the only way to keep together is to drop the whole thing.

MARY
We couldn’t afford the upkeep anyway. Let Seamus worry about it.

PATRICK
It’s not about the money –
MARY
I know -
(a deep breath)
But when you’ve talked about the things that happened here – won’t it help? To move on?

PATRICK
Perhaps. If I didn’t have my mother’s protection, at least I had the protection of this place. Now that’s being taken away too, I feel I might go mad. At the same time, part of me can’t wait to get rid of the fucking place.

MARY
Then let’s go back to London.

PATRICK
Or somewhere else. After this holiday, we need a holiday.

MARY
Where would we go?

INT. HALLWAY, THE CHATEAU, LACOSTE 2003 – DAY
Sweating, mopping his brow, a SMARTLY-DRESSED MAN waits in the doorway, briefcase in hand.

PATRICK greets him, shakes his hand, leads him upstairs.

INT. ELEANOR’S BEDROOM, THE CHATEAU, LACOSTE 2003 – DAY and now he produces from his briefcase an official stamp, pens, documents. M. GAUTIER is the notary, here to witness the signing.

ELEANOR sits with a pen, the documents in front of her. MARY and CLAUDINE the nurse are also present. PATRICK places the documents in front of her – indicates where she must sign.

She signs. Signs again.

M.GAUTIER stamps the document.

PATRICK
There we are. C’est fini.

ELEANOR beckons him closer, presses a note into his hand. Crumpled paper. He reads the scrawl. ‘why seamus no come’

PATRICK (CONT’D)
I’m sure there’s a good reason.
Later. PATRICK sits and reads at ELEANOR’s side. But there’s noise from the corridor. ELEANOR stirs, panicked.

PATRICK
I’ll go and see.

PATRICK’s P.O.V. as he walks towards the kitchen where the hippyish couple are happily making tea for themselves. KEVIN and ANNETTE, with rucksacks on their backs.

KEVIN
Hello there! We’re back! It’s Patrick, isn’t it? Kevin, Annette –

ANNETTE
We’re making tea. D’you have any fresh lemons?

PATRICK
I don’t understand –

ANNETTE
Oh. Did Seamus not talk to you? He said you might have a spare room?

PATRICK, furious, storms towards the Guest House, where SEAMUS sits, reading in the sun.

PATRICK
Seamus, I don’t want to disturb your hard work –

SEAMUS
Not at all. Please, here (offering up a chair) - be my guest.

PATRICK
Is that what I am now? Your guest? Or are you in fact our guest until we leave?

PATRICK (CONT’D)
Because we are not prepared to have you billet your sidekicks with us –

SEAMUS
I merely thought, given that you’ve so much space, you accommodate my guests for the last week –
PATRICK (CONT’D)
The terms of my mother’s gift are absolutely clear -

MARY follows on, ROBERT behind her.
SEAMUS ‘Terms’ is a very legalistic way of putting it. There’s nothing in writing about the Foundation providing you with a free holiday. I have a genuine sympathy for the trouble you’ve had in accepting your mother’s wishes -

PATRICK (CONT’D)
We’re not talking about the trouble I’ve had, we’re talking about the trouble you’re having -

SEAMUS They’re inseparable!

PATRICK Everything looks inseparable to a moron!

MARY Let’s all calm down, shall we?

PATRICK My wife’s your great defender, Seamus. My theory is you’re a bad man pretending to be an idiot whereas she thinks you’re merely an idiot.

MARY If we could stay on the subject -

ROBERT has returned and listens in, shocked by it all.

SEAMUS Perhaps the community should hold a meeting, Kevin and Annette, Mary and yourself -

PATRICK We’re not part of your fucking ‘community’!

SEAMUS If you don’t want to be part of it, then perhaps you should go.
MARY
  Well. At least we know where we stand.

And now ROBERT can bear it no longer.

ROBERT
  Why don’t you go away, you horrible man, and leave us alone! This is my grandmother’s house and we have more right to be here than you do!

MARY takes his hand and tries to calm him down. PATRICK joins them, a united front. Faced with this, SEAMUS retreats.

SEAMUS
  Well I’m going to have to process some of these negative feelings.

PATRICK
  Fine. You process away. Be my guest. Do a ritual!

And he starts to walk away. The family head back towards the house, but PATRICK can’t resist one more attack. He turns, looking truly murderous. MARY watches -

PATRICK (CONT’D)
  One last thing. My mother gave me this -

  (the slip of paper)
  It’s a little shaky, she’s not well. It says ‘why Seamus no come’. Now she’s given you the house you’ve dropped her.

SEAMUS
  I don’t need lectures from you on the importance of my friendship with Eleanor.

PATRICK
  Just go and see her. I know she’s not great company but that’s just one of the treasure trove of things you have in common.

SEAMUS
  I don’t have to stand for these insults. You have no idea what an extraordinary woman she is.

PATRICK
  You’re quite wrong. I couldn’t wish for a more extraordinary mother.

He walks back to his family, and they walk away united, for the moment at least.
But now is packing while PATRICK lies on the bed.

PATRICK
Do you remember the olden days, when we used to go to bed in the afternoon.

MARY
I’ve just got Thomas to sleep.

PATRICK
That’s not the reason. We’re not exactly grinding our teeth in frustr -

MARY
For Christ’s sake, I have one hour.
One hour to finish packing, find a nursing home, finish all my work, make phone calls, talk to Robert, and now I have to make you feel better too!

PATRICK
Fine, forget I asked.

MARY
- and why do you always ask for attention when you know it’s impossible? I think you’d be horrified if I tried to make love to you now.

PATRICK
Well, not horrified.

MARY
(growling, collapsing)
Let’s finish packing. Then we’ll see.

They lie there, and close their eyes.

MUSIC UP: Summertime from Porgy and Bess, the more sombre Paul Robeson recording.

PATRICK sits on his childhood bed; the last time he’ll ever be here.

He walks down the hallway and -
- descends the fine staircase to the first floor, past the spot where he waited uselessly for ELEANOR in Never Mind.

He walks down the corridor, stops a moment. Through the gap in the door to ELEANOR’s room -

MARY
We’re taking the children to the U.S. They’ve never been. Just for ten days. Claudine will look after you while we’re gone.

PATRICK enters -

...we’ll find you somewhere in London, somewhere comfortable. Then we’ll come back and bring you home.

PATRICK
Time to go.

MARY and ROBERT leave. PATRICK and ELEANOR alone. Silence, then -

PATRICK (CONT’D)
Can I get you anything, or -?

ELEANOR
I want -
(she beckons him closer)
I want you...to kill me.

PATRICK is speechless for a moment, then.

PATRICK
I’d love to help, but it’s against the law.

ELEANOR
No...longer.

PATRICK
I understand. Here -

Looking for solace in practicality, he begins to feed her, supporting her head as she takes sips from the plastic cup.

There’s a new, unexpected tenderness to all of this - he takes great care.

But now CLAUDINE is back. He kisses his mother’s forehead.
PATRICK (CONT’D)
When we get back...I’ll see what I can do. I promise.

60 INT. CORRIDOR, STAIRCASE, THE CHATEAU, LACOSTE 2003 - CONTINUOUS

Shaken by ELEANOR’s request, PATRICK approaches MARY and ROBERT, who wait silhouetted in the doorway.

PATRICK Ready.

One last look, and they step out into the sunlight. PATRICK pulls the door closed -

61 INT. ELEANOR’S BEDROOM, THE CHATEAU, LACOSTE 2003 - CONTINUOUS

ELEANOR hears the slamming of the door, the sound of the engine, the wheels on the gravel.

62 INT/EXT. TERRACE/DRAWING ROOM, THE CHATEAU, LACOSTE 2003 - CONTINUOUS

The car drives away -
- watched from the drawing room by SEAMUS, the same vantage point where DAVID MELROSE once stood and spoke of machine-gunning the valley.

SEAMUS turns.
He takes in the fine room, the Boudins on the wall...

63 INT. HALLWAY, THE CHATEAU, LACOSTE 2003 - CONTINUOUS

The hallway, silent now -

64 INT. KITCHEN, THE CHATEAU, LACOSTE 2003 - CONTINUOUS

The kitchen, empty and melancholy -

65 INT. PATRICK AND MARY’S BEDROOM, THE CHATEAU, LACOSTE 2003 - CONTINUOUS

The bed, stripped bare now.

65A EXT. THE HOUSE, THE CHATEAU, LACOSTE 2003 - CONTINUOUS

One last look at the house -
INT. CAR, PROVENCE 2003 - DAY

PATRICK, in the passenger seat. No looking back as we MATCH CUT TO:

INT/EXT. YELLOW CAB, FREEWAY, NEW YORK 1982 - DAY

It’s 1982, and PATRICK’s younger self is making that twitchy, paranoid trip to pick up DAVID’s ashes.

The MANHATTAN skyline. The Empire State, the Chrysler, the WORLD TRADE CENTER -

INT/EXT. YELLOW CAB, FREEWAY, NEW YORK 2003 - DAY

We’re in the present day. ROBERT’s face pressed to the taxi window. PATRICK smiles at his excitement.

PATRICK
What d’you think?

ROBERT (O.C.)
It’s exactly like I expected it to be.

EXT. THE CROWN MIDTOWN, NEW YORK 2003 - DAY

They join MARY and THOMAS on the pavement outside a generic midtown mid-price hotel. No porters or bellboys here. They struggle in with their bags.

INT. ROOM, THE CROWN MIDTOWN, NEW YORK 2003 - DAY

Curtains are pulled apart to reveal - a brick wall, a fire escape. Two adjoining rooms, a fold-out sofa and TV. THOMAS, now wide awake, jumps on one bed while ROBERT, exhausted, flicks through the cable channels.

PATRICK
So much for the views. It’s like living in a quarry.

MARY
It’s only for one night.

ROBERT
I’m so tired.
MARY
I know, but you have to try and stay awake.

ROBERT
I’m starving too. Can we have room service?

PATRICK
No room service here, I’m afraid. I’ll go and get something. Who wants pizza!
(but they’re all exhausted or distracted)
I’ll be back soon.

INT. CORRIDOR, THE CROWN MIDTOWN, NEW YORK 2003 – DAY
And outside the door, he breaks into a run –

EXT. DRAKE HOTEL, NEW YORK 2003 – DAY
PATRICK, carrying a brown bag of groceries, stands in front of the DRAKE HOTEL – the location of his epic breakdown in ‘Bad News.’ He hesitates. He really should head back –

INT. LOBBY, DRAKE HOTEL, NEW YORK 2003 – DAY
Inside, it’s all exactly as before; money, comfort, luxury, privilege. Even the sinister BELLBOY is there, along with the same RECEPTIONIST.

RECEPTIONIST
Are you staying with us, sir?

PATRICK
Sorry? Oh, you’re here! Hello again!

RECEPTIONIST
Are you a hotel resident?

PATRICK
Not this time. Just...meeting a friend in the bar.

INT. BAR, DRAKE HOTEL, NEW YORK 2003 – DAY
PATRICK sits at the bar, the sack of groceries by his side, draining his glass.

PATRICK
Another whisky please, no ice.
He looks around, suddenly out of place, a middle-aged man weighed down by groceries. The second drink is accompanied by the cheque; he laughs at the price, downs the whiskey, pokes in his wallet for the money.

75

INT. CORRIDOR, THE CROWN MIDTOWN, NEW YORK 2003 - NIGHT

And now, drunk, with groceries in one hand, take-away pizzas in the other, he staggers back to the room -

76

INT. HOTEL ROOM, THE CROWN MIDTOWN, NEW YORK 2003 - NIGHT

- and bursts in with manic good cheer, into an atmosphere of palpable tension. He has been gone too long, ROBERT is weepy, MARY worried and angry (while THOMAS sleeps next door.)

PATRICK

Sorry sorry sorry, had to walk miles. Here - pizza!

(unpacking)

Couldn’t find a kettle so I got us a Travel Smart Hot Beverage Maker -

(the groceries)

No oats that taste of oats or apples that taste of apples, only oats that taste of apples-

(a bottle of whisky, opened and one quarter drained. ROBERT sees this, PATRICK sees him seeing)

- and cinnamon of course, to go with the toothpaste.

He ruffles ROBERT’s hair, but he shrugs this off. MARY sees this, and the look of sadness it provokes.

Meanwhile the pizzas, leaking grease onto the carpet, are hopeless and cold.

MARY

Goodness, aren’t they big! No knives, we’ll have to just...tear at them.

PATRICK

Christ. Thick as a nappy. Sorry about that. I ordered the special, but what is this? Is this...pineapple?

(ROBERT is unbearably sad)

Hey, hey Robert - what’s wrong?

ROBERT

I want it to be like France.
And this hits PATRICK hard.

MARY
We’re all exhausted. Let’s start the holiday again tomorrow, shall we?

In the next room, THOMAS starts to cry. PATRICK slumps.

INT/EXT. CAR/NEW YORK FREeway, NEW YORK 2003 – DAY
MARY drives the rental-car out of the city, PATRICK sleeping in the passenger seat.

EXT. SUBURBAN ROAD, 2003 – DAY
Into the suburbs now –

MARY (V.O.)
Are you sure this is alright?

PATRICK (V.O.)
Of course. She was very keen on the phone. We can stay as long as we want.

INT/EXT. CAR/BACK-ROADS, CONNECTICUT 2003 – DAY
And the countryside, finally pulling up at a handsome house set in beautiful grounds. A man stands and waves from the porch; sleek, self-satisfied, pompous but not unkind.

PATRICK
Oh, God. She’s invited Henry.

MARY
Who’s Henry?

PATRICK
Nancy’s cousin. He got all the money, which makes Nancy furious. Whatever you do, don’t talk about politics. He’s a nice man, but pretty much a fascist.

MARY
Oh good.

NANCY, ELEANOR’s younger sister, joins him, looking a little less enthusiastic.
Cousin Henry
Hello! It’s the Melroses!

Patrick
Christ, I hate the rich.

Mary
Especially now you’re not going to become one.

Patrick
Especially now.

They get out of the car. The Melrose family suddenly feel distinctly shabby.

81 Omitted

82 Ext. The Mansion, Connecticut 2003 - Day

The tour. Nancy, brittle and self-absorbed, is wary.

Nancy
There’s a games room, a cinema, a pool of course -

Patrick
This is very kind of you, Nancy.

Nancy
After what my sister’s done to you, it’s the least I can do.
(Patrick bristles at the tone. To Mary)
Patrick says that you work now!

Mary
Oh, I’ve always worked, I’m in publishing-

Nancy (distracted)
They won’t run indoors, will they?

Mary
Of course not.

Nancy
- shouting, that sort of thing.

The garden is lovely and the kids run around happily,

Cousin Henry
Nonsense. They must do whatever they want -
NANCY
- but they should stay out of the woods. It’s a Lyme disease hotspot, and the ticks are just dreadful this year, the poison ivy too. It looks pretty, but really it’s like a Cambodian swamp. Best to assume you’re always in danger.

PATRICK
A rule to live by.

MARY
Robert! Thomas! Shall we go for a swim?

PATRICK
I’ll go get the costumes.

NANCY
I’ll come with you. We need to talk about Eleanor.

83  EXT. DRIVEWAY, THE MANSION, CONNECTICUT 2003 - DAY
PATRICK slams the car boot shut, heaves the cases inside.

84  INT. HALLWAY, THE MANSION, CONNECTICUT 2003 - DAY
- and scatters clothes as he searches for the swimming costumes.

85  INT. STUDY, THE MANSION, CONNECTICUT 2003 - DAY
PATRICK sits impatiently with swimming costumes in his lap as NANCY flicks furiously through an auction catalogue.

NANCY
So many things, so many lovely things, all stolen. A world class fortune, gone.

(the catalogue)
These - these were ours! Made for Napoleon. They used to just sit on the terrace in the rain. A million and a half dollars, that’s what my little stepbrother got for Mummy’s garden tubs. Wouldn’t you like to have some of these for your children?

PATRICK
I would but it’s a little late for that now.
Poor Patrick. I know exactly how you must feel.

Patrick (a bitter laugh)
You seem to be doing just fine here, Nancy.

Nancy
This place? Believe me, this is nothing to what we should have had -

Patrick
Shall we talk about my mother?
(he sits with her)
There’s really no improvement, or hope of improvement. She’s aware of this and has asked me to kill her.

Nancy
Oh, Patrick! That’s not fair, that’s really not fair!

Patrick
I have no doubt that helping her to die would be the most loving thing I could do.

Nancy
Well maybe...maybe you should rent an ambulance and drive her to Holland.

Patrick
Arriving in Holland isn’t in itself fatal.

Nancy
Patrick, please! Let’s not talk about this any more, it’s too upsetting.

Patrick
Fine, but I haven’t told Mary, so -

Nancy
Goodness, why haven’t you told her?

Patrick
In case it’s a good idea.

Mary arrives.

Mary
Those swimming costumes?
(he hands them over)
Nancy, we’re very grateful.
NANCY
Treat it like home! But no wet feet on the carpets please -

MARY
Of course -

NANCY
And they mustn’t play with the figurines, they’re Meissen.

It’s all getting a bit much for PATRICK -

PATRICK
I don’t suppose you’d like a drink before dinner?

NANCY
Oh, I don’t drink. Didn’t you know? I watched it destroy Daddy’s life. But you help yourself.

A moment. MARY looks at the floor.

PATRICK
Later perhaps.

INT/EXT. DRAWING ROOM/LAWN, THE MANSION, CONNECTICUT 2003 - DAY

A little later, and PATRICK is sneaking away from the family group, checking to see no-one has noticed. Furtive, urgent.

INT. DRAWING ROOM, THE MANSION, CONNECTICUT 2003 - DAY

He wears long swimming shorts, still damp, and a shirt, and is searching for the drinks tray -

PATRICK
There you are!

He goes to pour a glass of whisky then, not wanting to dirty the glass, decides to take a swig from the bottle.

The sound of the children playing. He should join them.

But the bottle; the level is lower than expected.

PATRICK (CONT’D)
Damn.

Perhaps he could water it down? No water. Think!

He takes another swig - looks around for somewhere to hide the evidence -
INT/EXT. CAR/DRIVEWAY, THE MANSION, CONNECTICUT 2003 - DAY 89
He hurries outside, stashing the empty bottle in a bush on the way to the rental car, where he fumbles the keys, drops them, climbs in. Ding-ding-ding - safety belt not on. He starts the engine.

EXT. DRIVEWAY, THE MANSION, CONNECTICUT 2003 - DAY 90
Ding-ding-ding. Heading for the entrance, driving a little too fast, the car on the left side of the road. A swerve. The car on the right side of the road.

INT/EXT. CAR/ROAD, CONNECTICUT 2003 - DAY 91
PATRICK is driving much, much too fast. Ding-ding-ding. To drown out the noise he turns the radio on. American Rock Anthems. He shouts and whoops along -

EXT. CAR PARK, LIQUOR STORE, CONNECTICUT 2003 - DAY 92
- and sprays gravel in the forecourt of the Vino Veritas Liquor Store. Ding-ding-ding. He stumbles from the car and runs inside.

INT/EXT. CAR/CAR PARK, LIQUOR STORE, CONNECTICUT 2003 - DAY 93 Three bottles of booze in a brown paper bag are dumped onto the passenger seat. Suddenly the business of driving seems entirely beyond him.

He looks at his watch, looks around him. A pay-phone.

EXT. CAR PARK, LIQUOR STORE, CONNECTICUT 2003 - DAY 94
PATRICK pumps coins into the phone. The murmur of JULIA’s answering machine. He pours whisky into a take-out coffee cup.

PATRICK
Julia, it’s Patrick. Are you hiding behind your machine? Ah well.

The shaking hand, the slurred speech - he’s heading back to the bottom. He starts to cry.

PATRICK (CONT’D)
Feel a little in freefall here. I wanted a friendly voice. Ah well. I love you.
He hangs up. What was that? Might it be true?

EXT. DRIVEWAY, THE MANSION, CONNECTICUT 2003 - EVENING

He parks the rental car on the diagonal, runs up the steps -

INT. DRAWING, THE MANSION, CONNECTICUT 2003 - EVENING

PATRICK replaces the bottle. Gathers himself. Impossibly drunk. Still wearing shorts.

INT. HALLWAY, THE MANSION, CONNECTICUT 2003 - EVENING

He’s buttoning up his trousers as he walks towards the dining room -

INT. DINING ROOM, THE MANSION, CONNECTICUT 2003 - CONTINUOUS

MARY, NANCY and COUSIN HENRY; sleek, self-satisfied, pompous but not unkind. ROBERT sits, bored. THOMAS plays with toy cars on the floor.

MARY
There you are! We were about to call the police!

NANCY
There’s a slobbering thought. I’m so sorry, I had a sudden yen to see the countryside. Sobering. Did I say slobbering? I meant sobering.

He takes his seat unsteadily. This is the drunkest we’ve seen him, and NANCY is mortified, MARY is furious. ROBERT is frightened – he has never quite seen this state before – and the air of tension is increased by THOMAS burbling away.

MARY
I was just saying how tired the children are from playing outside.

PATRICK winces, reaches for the wine. MARY – ‘don’t.’

NANCY
Of course it’s nothing to what we used to have. My grandfather had a 150-acre garden on Long Island. I’m not talking about the woods and fields, a garden -
PATRICK
Shall we change the subject?

NANCY is stung.

MARY
Henry has been telling us all bout the Middle East.

PATRICK
- or we could change it back.

COUSIN HENRY
I was recalling Pearl Harbour. When Admiral Yamamoto had finished his attack, he said 'Gentlemen, we have roused a sleeping giant -'

And during the above, PATRICK reaches for the wine. MARY touches his hand - no, please no more - but he pours it all the same, and all the while THOMAS’s noise gets louder.

COUSIN HENRY (CONT’D)
...and it is this thought that should be in the mind of the world’s terrorists and their state sponsors.

NANCY
Are you familiar with the phrase ‘children should be seen not heard?’

A beat, then MARY bridles.

MARY
Of course. I think it’s nonsense.

NANCY
For my part, I’ve always thought it was entirely too liberal.

MARY
(laughing, appalled)
You’d rather not see him either?
Fine.

MARY stands and takes ROBERT and THOMAS to the door. ROBERT is visibly upset at his father’s state.

PATRICK
Christ, Nancy, you sound just like my father.

NANCY
Patrick, we’re just trying to extend some hospitality -
PATRICK
Oh we just po’ white trash, throwing oursef on the charitee of our American kin.

HENRY
You don’t have to accept it, if you don’t want to.

PATRICK
You’re right, we don’t.

MARY stands in the doorway. ‘Not again...’

MARY
But we’d like to.

PATRICK
Speak for yourself.

MARY
I am! And I’m also trying to speak for our children.

PATRICK
You’re not even speaking for yourself! ‘Entirely too liberal!’? I mean, fuck off!

INT. BEDROOM, THE MANSION, CONNECTICUT 2003 - NIGHT
Later. MARY packs their suitcases while PATRICK, a little more sober and ashamed now, stands in the doorway.

MARY
Less than twenty-four hours.

PATRICK
A new personal best.

MARY
Hardly worth unpacking.

PATRICK
(THOMAS on the bed)
You’re safely installed with your lover, I see.

MARY
I’ll move him to one side.

PATRICK
No, God forbid you should let one drop, one tiny drop of love and affection escape from the children -

MARY (CONT’D)
Lower your voice. Lower your voice -
MARY (CONT'D)
You’re right! I’ve no love or affection when you’re like this.

PATRICK
And the rest of the time?

MARY
(she laughs)
The ‘rest of the time’?

She sits. Quietly, calmly - THOMAS is right there.

MARY (CONT'D)
I think you ought to know; I’ve started to imagine life without you. Any compassion or patience I might have had, it’s all dried up - and it’s not just the drinking, or this demeaning...thing with Julia - demeaning to you as much as me - or the mindless destruction. It’s the way the children are involved. That thing Nancy said, about watching her father destroy his life. It’s what Robert saw this evening - (PATRICK knows this too) - and yet you don’t stop. If you can’t change, you have to go.

PATRICK
I see. Would you like me to go now?

MARY
Yes, please.
(goes back to packing)
At least there are plenty of spare bedrooms.

INT/EXT. CAR/DRIVEWAY, THE MANSION, CONNECTICUT 2003 - DAY
The rental car is driving away. No-one waves goodbye. Inside, a barely suppressed atmosphere of anger and embarrassment -

INT/EXT. CAR/BACK ROADS, CONNECTICUT 2003 - DAY
Heading back to New York. PATRICK checks behind - the kids aren’t listening. In a low voice -

PATRICK
I didn’t want to tell you while we were on holiday. And it’s not an excuse. My mother has asked me to kill her. To help her die.
MARY
I see. I'm sorry.
(she takes this in)
God.

And they drive on in silence.

EXT. THE CROWN MIDTOWN, NEW YORK 2003 - DAY

And wearily, once again unload their bags outside the hotel -

INT. CORRIDOR, THE CROWN MIDTOWN, NEW YORK 2003 - DAY

- and head down an identical corridor to their room.

INT. HOTEL ROOM, THE CROWN MIDTOWN, NEW YORK 2003 - NIGHT

Grocery bags, take-out cartons. THOMAS already asleep under the sheets. ROBERT looks through the door at his father, lying on the floor in front of the sofa bed, channel hopping.

MARY watches too, the news about ELEANOR still with her. Not forgiveness exactly, but a sense of understanding. Quietly -

MARY
Why don't you go and sit with your father. Watch TV. He'd like that.

ROBERT's about to approach, but now PATRICK opens a miniature of whisky, pours it, knocks back a pill, then becomes aware of ROBERT's presence. He shows the tiny bottle to ROBERT.

PATRICK
I'm cutting down.
(He tries a smile.
ROBERT smiles back.
With open arms)
Come and say goodnight.

ROBERT
(remaining in the doorway)
Goodnight then.

And ROBERT closes the door. PATRICK watches, and remembers -

INT. HALLWAY, THE CHATEAU, LACOSTE 1967 - NIGHT

- YOUNG PATRICK walking down the corridor, late at night, pushing at his mother's door -
- ELEANOR is awake. She sees YOUNG PATRICK and smiles, throws back the sheet. He climbs in and she pulls him close.

Lying on the floor, PATRICK hears the laughter through the walls.

He turns on the TV, turns the volume up. Channel hops, the channels changing faster, faster -

CUT TO BLACK.
